SENATE COMMITTEE ON BEHAVIORAL HEALTH SUBCOMMITTEE TO HEALTH & LONG TERM CARE

Staff: Kevin Black (786-7747)

Background: Opioid Overdose Reversal Medication. Opioid overdose reversal medication is a drug used to reverse an opioid overdose that binds to opioid receptors and blocks or inhibits the effects of opioids acting on those receptors. Common opioid overdose reversal medications include Narcan, Naloxone, and Evzio. The Secretary of Health has issued a standing order making opioid overdose reversal medication to any person at risk of experiencing an opioid-related overdose or any person or entity in a position to assist a person at risk of experiencing an opioid-related overdose. Prescribers and dispensers are authorized to provide opioid overdose reversal medication pursuant to the standing order to any person at risk of experiencing an opioid overdose or to any person in a position to assist a person at risk of experiencing an opioid overdose.

Prior to 2022, hospital emergency departments were authorized to allow practitioners to prescribe and for practitioners and registered nurses to distribute prepackaged opioid overdose reversal medication upon discharge if the practitioner determined the patient was at risk of an opioid overdose.

Second Substitute Senate Bill 5195 (2021). Beginning January 1, 2022, hospitals are required to provide a person who presents to an emergency department with symptoms of opioid overdose, opioid use disorder, or other adverse event related to opioid use with opioid overdose reversal medication upon discharge, unless the treating practitioner determines that dispensing or distributing opioid overdose reversal medication is not appropriate or the practitioner confirms the patient already has the medication. If the hospital dispenses or distributes the medication, it must provide directions for use and information about the medication, harm reduction strategies, and what services may be available. A practitioner in a hospital emergency department, defined as a person authorized to prescribe drugs, must dispense or distribute opioid overdose reversal medication.

Summary of Bill: A registered nurse or licensed practical nurse may dispense or distribute opioid overdose reversal medication instead of a practitioner in order to comply with laws requiring this medication to be provided to a person who presents to a hospital emergency department with symptoms of an opioid overdose, opioid use disorder, and other adverse event related to opioid use.
